Description

Provenance Very likely part of the suite commissioned by the Duke of Beaufort for the Great Drawing Room in Badminton House when it was designed by Sir Jeffry Wyattville in 1811-12. An extremely rare and elegant Grecian giltwood daybed from the Regency period attributed to Nicholas Morel and Robert Hughes. English Circa 1810-1815. The cushioned seat within padded and giltwood scrolled ends, the headrest being of greater height, the giltwood carved frame with leaf, husk, harebells and patera-carved facings over a gadrooned rail on palmette-carved baluster legs finishing on reeded cups and castors. Retaining all of its original upholstery and bolster which have been traditionally reshaped and covered with a silk upholstery and fine matching piping. Some very small areas of original gilt work were retained whilst the rest carefully matched. This important and rare giltwood daybed was designed to add both style and comfort to highly fashionable, furnished interiors. With its timeless elegance, it will provide a stylish and comfortable statement piece in any contemporary home. The likes of the Royal Palaces and Important Houses have very similar quality and designed giltwood ...
