Description

A small late 18th - early 19th century refectory table circa 1780 - 1820. The table base is constructed from ash and oak and has moulded rails and chamfered legs. The top is constructed from one piece of elm with cleated ends, which is pegged to the base. The top is also a scrub top, meaning this can be cleaned with any cleaning product and you will not damage the patination. The table has a lovely dry washed out top and the base has a beautiful red and orange patination to the oak and ash timbers. The table top has sustained some old wood worm damage which is common for elm of this age, other than that, the table is in excellent condition and is solid.
