Description

A striking Gouache painting by Raoul Dufy (1877-1953) Design for a pattern for Bianchini-Férier dating from the early 20th century. Depicting vivid floral arrangements - of triangular form which would have been executed as a design for a textile such as wallpaper or scarves. Framed in a 19th century French frame, featuring original paint. This work has excellent provenance having been sold by Christie's in London on the 16th November 2000. Painter, draftsman, textile artist, and printmaker Raoul Dufy is remembered for his colorful, playful paintings of landscapes, interiors, and scenes of leisure—at the regatta, opera, and races—along the French Riviera. Though he experimented with other styles, he was a devoted follower of Fauvism. Dufy initially looked to the Impressionists for inspiration but was forever changed by his exposure to the vivid canvases of Paul Cézanne, André Derain, and Henri Matisse. He worked with watercolor, charcoal, oil, and acrylic, imbuing his scenes with liveliness as he painted his figures in rapid strokes atop thin washes of color. Dufy's work was well received during his lifetime, and in 1952, he won the International Grand Prize for Paint...
