Description

A fabulous chunky Victorian Scottish agate and sterling silver bracelet dating from circa 1860. The polished faceted agate barrels are beautiful shades from deep carnelian orange to speckled brown and black. Scottish jewellery was made popular by Queen Victoria from the mid 1800s, when she frequently visited Scotland and her Scottish castle Balmoral. The bracelet is in very good antique condition, there are a few tiny nicks to the edges of the agate facets. It secures with a simple hook and loop which is quite secure when on the wrist. Size: Just over eight inches long when stretched flat; because of the chunky construction of the bracelet the inside circumference is just under seven inches when worn. The length could easily be extended with more links or an Albert clasp or traditional padlock, for example. Each agate barrel is approx 1.8 x 0.8cm, not including the silver caps. Weight: 31.9g.
