Description

Large Edwardian oak refectory table. This large Edwardian oak refectory table was made in the first quarter of the 20th century. The solid oak planked top sits on the silhouette shaped ends that are joined by a bar, each end carries on through the end with a slot that then a shaped tapering peg is tapped in until the table is rigid. It is a style and design that has been popular and very useful from the Elizabethan period. These make a most wonderful piece for a kitchen and informal style of dining. Imagine how much pleasure you will have as you entertain your family and friends as you dine around this great dining table.
