Description

A fine 19th century oil on canvas portrait stated to be Captain Paul John Henry Butler, 5th Royal Lancashire Militia, half length, wearing breast star. Housed in a gilt frame which is glazed to protect the painting. The size of the painting being 61x 73 cm whilst overall the size is 79 x 89 cm. In overall very good condition ready to hang. Face smooth not mottled as appears in photo (due to glazing). It is stated in the London Gazettes "GC Paul John Henry Butler, Gentleman, to be Supernumerary Lieutenant, 16th November, 1860, promoted January 1867". The 5th Lancashire Militia became the Third Battalion East Lancashire Regiment. The 5th Royal Lancashire Militia (5th RLM) was an auxiliary regiment raised in the county of Lancashire in North West England just before the Crimean War. It later became part of the East Lancashire Regiment. Although primarily intended for home defence, it saw two years' active service during the Second Boer War. After conversion to the Special Reserve (SR) under the Haldane Reforms it supplied reinforcements to the fighting battalions during World War I and carried out internal security duties in Ireland. After a shadowy postwar existence th...
