Description

This charming mid-19th-century oil painting by German artist Georg Wilhelm Feistkorn (1811-1843) depicts a lady within an interior. Sitting rather piously within a relatively sparsely decorated room, she's echoing the sentiments of the 'Biedermeier' period. Sandwiched between the Neoclassical and Romantic periods, the Biedermeier style influenced painting, interiors and architecture. Following the conclusion of the Napoleonic Wars, citizens desired a wholesome way of life without drama or whims of fancy. There was a collective feeling of national pride coupled with a need for stability. This comfortable middle-class lady is an example of those ideologies and proud to display her appropriately styled decor. Georg Wilhelm Feistkorn was well-versed in the philosophy of the Biedermeier period, particularly with regard to how it applied to portraiture. His fine, exquisitely detailed, works are a window into his world and rarely surface. Signed/dated and held within a later frame. Medium: Oil on canvas Overall size: 29" x 37½" / 73cm x 95cm Year of creation: 1840 Provenance: Private collection, Germany. Condition: Artwork presents well. Craquelure but the paint is stable.
