Description

This is a fine substantial antique French iron and bronze Duck Press, stamped in relief "Depose" and dating from the late 19th Century. The main frame of the duck press is decorated with lion maskheads and is raised on four substantial legs terminating in paw feet with embossed and engraved decoration above a platform base. It is fitted with a removable pot with strainer fitted with a spout. The press is a flat disk driven by a turn screw via a wheel at the top. The duck press was invented in France during the 1800's by a Chef called Mechenet to make "Caneton de Rouen a' la Presse". It became a signature dish in Paris and was made table-side in front of the guests. This rare culinary item will turn your dining experience into a Michelin star occasion. Condition: In excellent condition having been shot blasted. Shot blasting is a surface treatment technique that makes use of particulate grains propelled under high velocity. This process is a highly effective solution for removing contamination on metal substrates.
