Description

A lovely mid 18th Century silver cream jug. This fine piece, dating from early in the reign of George III, stands on a raised pedestal base with a gadrooned border. The body is baluster shape and has a matching gadrooned rim. To the front is a script monogram. Table silver other than spoons, dating from the middle of the 18th Century is increasingly rare and sought after. This wonderful example is both practical and decorative and would still grace any table, over two hundred and fifty years after it was made. Dimensions below.
