Description

19th Century English Folk Art Gentleman's Cane A rare and quite special example of a 19th Century folk art English gentleman's walking cane with a hidden surprise. Made from a single piece of ebonised cane, with metal tip. The shaft is quite special and rare as it's made from African originated natural horn material which has been carved into a jester's head. This example would have been carried by a very well to do gentleman in the mid-19th century, not only used for style when walking, but also for protections from thieves and muggers down dark alleyways and around London. The cane comes apart in 2 pieces as shown and is in wonderful condition considering its age and obvious use. Dimensions in inches: H 32" x W 1.25" x D 1.5" Age: Mid-19th Century Origin: English Condition: Aged Aged wear and tear across all the surfaces due to obvious use over the years. Areas of worn surface include loss of detail on the hand carved shaft section, a light split to the metal tip. This item is close to 150 years old so please expect natural and small imperfections as shown. With a lovely natural deep patina across all surfaces. Natural aged wooden cracks across the surfaces, Fir...
