Description

An unusual narrow oak console table dating from the late 19th / early 20th century. It likely originated from a university or library and could have been used as a reading or study table. The top has an inset red leather-effect surface and it stands on turned legs. It is nicely finished on all sides so could be used against a wall or in the middle of a room. There is ample leg clearance of 24 3/4" / 63cm making it suitable to sit at or it would make a good console table or a fabulous retail display table. The table is in very good condition with a lovely colour and patina. There are some minor marks and knocks but no major damages or anything detrimental. There are some old supporting metal brackets below the top but it is strong and sturdy. It has been gently cleaned and polished and is ready for use. The best description comes from the photos so please look at them all carefully and if you have any questions just ask. Nationwide delivery available through our network of reliable couriers.
