Description

With a fantastic colour, and in rarely seen Yew wood, this beautiful bureau dates from the reign of George II c. 1750. . With oak lined drawers and a handsome interior of small walnut drawers and pigeon holes and a door with figured walnut inlaid with yew wood banding and all with original brass button handles. . The bureau is most unusual in that the lopers are also secret drawers and can hold pens and treasures – I've not seen this before on any period bureau in my 45 years in the trade and the lopers are oak lined with small slide covers over. . The yew is cut in thick veneers and covers all visible faces of the bureau, it is beautifully aged and has superb patina. . The bureau has small losses, marks and dings consistent with caring use. The fall is sturdy and level and the drawers open and close smoothly. . A very rare and high quality bureau and an extremely eye catching piece of early Georgian furniture. . Dimensions are: . 37.5 inches wide, 20.5 inches deep and 38 inches high. . Floor to writing surface is 29.5 inches. . For metric please multiply by 2.5
