Description

This Regency small copper samovar was made circa 1810. It is made with a combination of copper and brass, that give a wonderful contrast. A samovar was used to fill with hot water so that it could fill or refill cups at the dining table or in a drawing room. The example here is of a rare small size and maybe for a bachelor. The copper body is a ball shape with the fine ring swing handles to each side. To the front is the tap for pouring, this is made of brass. It stands on a stepped square base with ball feet under. 32cms high 12 1/2ins 20cms wide 8ins 25.5cms deep 10ins Delivery We can arrange to package and post this Regency small copper samovar to UK addresses for £25+vat. For overseas destinations we can get a quote.
