Description

Alfred de Breanski Snr British, (1852-1928) The Head of Loch Lubnaig Oil on canvas, signed & transcribed verso
Image size: 23.5 inches x 35.5 inches Size including frame: 32.25 inches x 44.25 inches A stunning Highland landscape painting of a sunset over Loch Lubnaig by Alfred de Breanski. The painting is set at the head of a loch bathed in the glow of the setting sun with a dramatic mountainous landscape beyond. To the right, a figure can be seen herding cattle. Loch Lubnaig is a small freshwater loch near Callander in the Scottish Highlands, situated between Ben Ledi and Benvane to the south west and Ben Vorlic to the north east. The loch takes its name from the Gaelic word meaning crooked and is now part of the Loch Lomond and Trossachs National Park which was established in 2002. Another view of Loch Lubnaig painted by him is held by the Southampton City Art Gallery. Alfred de Breanski was a landscape painter born in the St Pancras area of London, the eldest son of Leopold de Breanski, a language professor and his wife Eugenie who were both from France. His brother Gustave and his sister Julie were also talented artists. The family settled in Greenwich from where B...
