Description

This early to mid-20th-century oil painting by 'Vincent Le Vaudois' depicts a still life with an assortment of objects including jugs, bottle, bowl, fruit, tablecloth, basket and newspaper. Produced around 1935, it emerged from a loosely connected community of foreign-born painters known as the 'School of Paris'. During the early 20th century, the French capital was alive with artistic spirit. As such, painters flocked from all over Europe in search of inspiration. Many of these were Jewish and tended to live together in Montparnasse, which was a hive of cafes, salons and shared ateliers. The Jewish contingent played an important role in the evolution of avant-garde ideas and later heavily influenced art in Israel. Members were numerous but included Emmanuel Mané-Katz, Abraham Mintchin, Georges Kars, Georges Ascher, Marc Chagall, and Moïse Kisling. Anti-semitic sentiment was high during this period and rose during the late 1930s, with the prospect of World War II. In the Summer of 1940, the German army marched on Paris, which forced many Jewish artists into hiding. The painting is signed in the upper left, 'Vincent Le Vaudois', but there are no directory records associ...
