Description

An Important George III mahogany spider-leg table attributed to Thomas Chippendale 1768. England The tulip banded rectangular mahogany drop-leaf top with gateleg action, on a straight mahogany frieze with oak lined cockbeeded drawers to each short side, on eight slender columnar form turned legs and stretchers ending in pad feet. Dimensions: 79 cm wide, 33 cm Deep, 71 cm High Closed - 33 cm Extended - 89 cm Employing superb timber, this 'neat' mahogany table is a wonderful example of Chippendale's utilitarian furniture which, through the sheer quality of materials and execution, is at once simple and distinguished. Chippendale supplied, 'a neat Mahogany 8 leg Table of fine wood', on 9 June 1768 at a cost of £2 2s 0d and a further pair of '2 neat Mahogany Spider leg Tables of good wood', probably similar in form to those at Dumfries House from 1760 although not necessarily by Chippendale. For a related example, see the spider-leg table sold Christie's London, 31 October 2012, lot 79 (£13,750) Sir Edward Knatchbull, 7th Bart. (1704-1789) comissioned Thomas Chippendale to make a 'neat Mahogany 8 leg Table of fine wood', on 9 June 1768 at a cost of £2 2s 0d. (request ima...
