Description

A lovely Demi-lune table dating from the late 18th / early 19th century. It stands on square tapering legs with a large central drawer and two dummy drawers on either side. The key for the centre drawer does not work the lock but serves to open the drawer. It is a good quality piece and the colour of the timber is superb with a lovely patina. It is in good condition and displays beautifully. There are signs of age and use, some light knocks and minor surface marks but nothing untoward. There are no major damages and the table is strong and sturdy. It has been gently cleaned and polished and is ready for use.
