Description

A gorgeous 18th Century silver cream jug. This fine piece, dating from early in the reign of George III, stands on a raised pedestal base with a gadrooned border. The body is baluster shape and has a dot studded rim. To the front is a vacant cartouche and the body is embossed with pastoral images of cottages, trees, cattle & birds. Table silver other than spoons dating from the 18th Century, is increasingly rare and sought after. This wonderful example is both practical and decorative and would still grace any table, over two hundred and forty years after it was made. Dimensions below.
