Description

This appealing Edwardian light oak luggage rack was once the property of Esso - the vintage trade label (see image) affixed to the frame points to this. Esso probably chose it for one of their hotel interiors because it is of superior quality, excellent condition, and appealing colour. Also, unlike many of the more utilitarian luggage racks, this oversized example, with the addition of a glass top, is attractive enough to be used in several different ways. It would make a stylish and interesting bedside, coffee, lamp, or TV table, and of course, if placed at the end of a bed, it would look great supporting some vintage luggage. The cabinet-making is particularly fine; the oak has been well chosen and the stand is robust and thoughtfully designed. A decorative piece that would look good in both contemporary and period interiors.
