Description

A really fine and unusual example of a mid 19thc fruitwood butter press / mould.....the two things I really like about this mould are....it is made from fruitwood, usually they would be carved from beech or sycamore and secondly, given my farming heritage, I really like wheatsheaves.....not that I can remember working with them!...but I can remember seeing my great aunt , baking fresh bread , and then cutting a slice , which she would spread with freshly made butter, which was always decorated with beautiful "country" patterns....plus homemade jam.....it always tasted as good as it looked and smelled...! It has gained a very good natural colour from being used in the country kitchen and is in excellent condition. English. C1840-60.
