Description

Beautiful rich jewel toned antique Sarouk rug, with amazing variations in the dye and older than most Sarouk rugs, woven around 1900-1910. A well drawn traditional floral Persian design with orange/red dyes that change through-out and change to lighter shades. Known as abrash, the Persian term for dye change, this is the charm of an antique rug. Deep royal blue dyes used for the border and hints of green and golds too. Sarouk's were woven in the village of Saruk in the Arak region of Persia. In good pile all over with some old marks in a couple of areas, it has been washed by our workshop and ready to be used. Sarouk rugs have been produced for much of the 20th century. The early successes of the Sarouk rug are largely owed to the American market. From the 1910s to 1950s, the "American Sarouk", also known as the "painted Sarouk", was produced. American customers had an affinity for the Sarouk's curvilinear and floral designs. What they did not appreciate, however, was the colour, so for much of the 1920s, 1930s and 1940s, rugs exported from Persia were dyed to a desirable, deep, raspberry-red colour, once they arrive in the USA.
