Description

Late 19th century, hand-painted: two panels with figures including a courting couple, two panels with flowers on a pink background, the whole piece richly gilded, decorated with swirls and geometric ornamentation, the base is unmarked and apparently the mark has been erased. The object is decorated with pastoral scenes, flowers and vegetal ornamentation. The shape of the vase is in the oriental style. The decoration is in the style of 'pink pompadour': the painting is done in gold on a pink background. Massive and very professionally made vase. The gallant and romantic characters and decorative panels of flowers are recognisable from Helena Wolfson. The Helena Wolfson factory existed for a short time (1879-1883), so the products of this manufactory are rare. At the factory near Dresden the porcelain itself was not produced, all blanks were supplied directly from different, most famous manufactories. In the factory, the blanks were painted, glazed and fired. Helena Wolfson specialised in Rococo porcelain painting. For a time the factory used the initials AR in its branding, but in 1883, as a result of a court case, the use of these letters was banned. The Helena Wol...
