Description

This pair of exquisitely sculpted porcelain busts from Turn-Teplitz, Bohemia showcases the elegance and artistry of the Art Nouveau movement. One bust features a young woman in a finely detailed Art Nouveau costume and a magnificent hat adorned with a striking bow. The hand-painted porcelain captures every nuance, particularly the intricate ruffles of her outfit. The garment is painted in soft tones of yellow-gold, blue, tan, and white enamels, accented with gilt, gold buttons, and a brooch, giving it a natural and lifelike appearance. The other bust depicts a handsome man with a large, elaborately designed hat featuring unique attachments. His face is animated with a jovial expression, adding charm to the piece. During the 1870s, Stellmacher developed a new ceramic material known as ivory porcelain, characterized by its soft yellowish shade and matte finish. This innovative material enabled ceramists to achieve more complex modeling and intricate detailing in their designs.
