Description

We are delighted to offer this enchanting antique 9ct gold Art Nouveau Edwardian aquamarine pendant necklace made c.1910. Immediately captivating upon first glance, this pendant embraces the wonderful stylistic elements of the Art Nouveau period. The overall goldwork is very intricate with curves, tapering sections and scrolls which present a fluid and naturalistic design. Refreshing, airy and light, the central faceted aquamarine is of a beautiful light blue hue which wonderfully contrasts the gold setting. A cluster of seed pearls form a border around the gem further elevating its overall splendour. A pin is present on the reverse side which allows for this pendant to be also worn as a most lovely brooch - such versatility makes this particular piece an easy choice to pair with an array of clothing, occasions and seasons. The freely suspended lavalier aquamarine at the bottom is well-matched with the central one, completing the overall appearance which is truly delightful upon wearing whereby a further sense of movement/liberty can be tangibly felt. Captivating and distinguished from contemporary pieces, this pendant makes for a wonderful addition to any ...
