Description

We are delighted to offer this stunning antique Edwardian pink tourmaline and seed pearl pendant necklace set in 15ct made c.1910. The goldwork is beautifully crafted with a naturalistic art nouveau design of scrolled foliate motifs. The pendant is embellished with fine seed pearls of tapering sizes and three drop pearls which move freely upon wearing. The centrepiece attraction is without question the enchanting pink tourmaline which has the most wonderful light pink hue that also changes to a more saturated purply-pink shade depending on the lighting. This unique colour and combination on this Edwardian pendant makes for a distinguished addition to any antique jewellery lover's collection and a conversation starter upon wearing. Owing to its bail and pin on the reverse side, it can be worn practically both as a brooch or a necklace and its alluring colour is a wonderful accent to any outfit. Overall, a highly attractive and unique piece of Edwardian jewellery - whilst more common combinations of gemstones such as amethyst and pearls are usually seen, this pink tourmaline is certainly an unusual find and a must have for lovers of all things pink.
