Description

This attractive fine early 19th century 8-day painted dial mahogany longcase clock by William Smith of Keighley is a testament to the elegance and craftsmanship of its era. The clock boasts a harmonious proportion, accentuated by the rich, warm tones of its mahogany case. The use of well-figured veneers adds depth and character, while the delicate boxwood inlays and subtle carvings speak to the meticulous attention to detail that was invested in its creation. The painted dial is a focal point, featuring classic Roman numerals and serpentine hands that are as functional as they are beautiful. This timepiece is not just a mere keeper of moments but a storyteller of its time, having witnessed the turn of centuries. Offered in fully restored showroom condition, this longcase clock is more than an antique; it's a piece of history, lovingly restored to its former glory. It promises to be not just a functional addition to one's home but a conversation starter, an heirloom, and a cherished possession for generations to come. Its presence in a room is a nod to the past and a bridge to the future, marking the passage of time with silent dignity. Height: 95 inches (241 cm) Width:...
