Description

This early 20th-century oil painting by Dutch artist Julius Jacobus van de Sande Bakhuyzen (1835-1925) depicts a gentle evening landscape with a pond and cattle. Born in The Hague, Julius Jacobus van de Sande Bakhuyzen's father was Hendrikus van de Sande Bakhuyzen (1795-1860), a leading figure in Dutch landscape painting and an influential tutor. So, as one can imagine, he was raised among artists and surrounded by creativity during his formative years. Hendrikus worked in a precise style, modelled after the approach taken by the 17th-century Dutch masters. As such, he championed the benefits of drawing and encouraged his students to work from nature, in the open air. He insisted they produce countless watercolour studies "in order to develop in them the gift of observation". By doing so, his students gained an advanced ability for both composition and draughtsmanship. By sharpening their technique, they were able to introduce their own ideas with greater efficacy. Following his tuition in the technical aspects of painting, young Julius sought inspiration further afield. He was particularly drawn to the emerging ideas of French artists such as Théodore Rousseau (1812-...
