Born in Bradford, Ernest Higgins Rigg studied at the Bradford School of Art. He went on to enrol at the Académie Julian, a prestigious private art school in Paris, popular with British artist of the late 19th Century. Whilst there, he was influenced by the French Impressionists and was encouraged to paint En Plein Air, that is, painting outdoors, capturing views and colours in natural light. He used strong brush strokes and had a great sense of colour. He exhibited widely at select venues, including the Royal Academy, Manchester City Art Gallery, The Royal Society of British Artists and with the Yorkshire Union of Artists.
