Description

Attractive Victorian burr yew wood stereoscope, a captivating piece of history dating back to circa 1880. The stereoscope, a device for viewing a pair of separate images as a single three-dimensional image, is veneered in the highly sought-after burr yew wood, known for its unique and intricate grain patterns. This adds an element of luxury and sophistication to the piece. The stereoscope comes with an impressive collection of 128 double stereo cards. These cards provide a glimpse into the past, with many featuring views of Victorian London. From the bustling streets to the majestic architecture, these cards capture the essence of the city during the Victorian era. In addition, the collection includes a variety of beach scenes. These cards transport the viewer to serene coastal landscapes, offering a contrast to the urban scenes of London. The set also contains street views and general topography cards. These offer a diverse range of scenes and landscapes, further enhancing the appeal of this stereoscope. Overall, this Victorian Burr Yew Wood Stereoscope is not just a device; it's a journey back in time, offering a unique perspective on life in the late 19th century. ...
