Description

A beautiful large Japanese Meiji Period patinated bronze study of an elephant with tigers, signed on the belly, Meiji period, 1868-1912, and late 19th Century in date. The finely cast sculpture shows a striding elephant with its head and trunk raised fighting two tigers. The tigers with stripes delineated in subtly-toned patination, the elephant with finely carved bone tusks, the cartouche on the underside signed, and raised on a decorative rustic wooden stand. Add this serious Japanese style icon to your home with this lovely bronze. Condition: In excellent condition, please see photos for confirmation of condition.
