Description

The rich history and provenance of the painting that once adorned the walls of The Saloon in Lord and Lady Sandys' estate at Ombersley Court is truly remarkable. With connections to significant moments in English history, including the Civil War, the reign of King Charles II, and the Peninsular War, this collection holds a vital link to the past. The recent sale of the estate marked the end of a 294-year-old legacy, bringing an end to centuries of historical importance and cultural significance encapsulated in the artwork. This description beautifully captures the essence of a portrait from the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, highlighting the opulence and status of the sitter through their attire and surroundings. The attention to detail in the composition, color scheme, and representation of the sitter's beauty emphasises the wealth and prestige of the subject. The painting effectively showcases the artistry of the era through the meticulous rendering of fabric textures and flesh tones, ultimately creating a captivating and luxurious portrait that reflects the elite society of the time. The portrait is inscribed: 'Lady Tipping / Daughter of Coll. Cheek'. Anne Ti...
