Description

This subtle art deco period painting really shows the difference a humble pot of flowers can make to a home! Judging from the trees outside, it is early spring at best, in what appears to be a northern redbrick town - but dappled light and azure blue blossoms make the interior warm, summery and almost give it a mediterranean feel. Clearly the artist saw his flowers as a source of joy which he wants to share with the beholder. Painted in the 1930s and presented in its original wood carved frame, our oil on canvas is signed at the lower right. I wonder if the signature might be that of the Belgian artist Rodolphe Strebelle (1880-1959), but I am not sure if I have identified it correctly. Measuring 65 x 55 cm for the canvas alone, the overall framed size is 80 x 69 cm.
