Description

We are delighted to offer this splendid late Victorian/early Edwardian blue enamel pendant necklace made c.1900 in 9ct solid gold. Striking and distinguished from contemporary pieces, this pendant necklace features a wonderful blue enamel guilloché design in the centre with a fine engine-turned pattern underneath. The blue enamel has a gorgeous hue which is elegant in the shadows, yet presents more vibrancy when exposed to sunlight with its glossy surface. In addition to its rich enamelling, the centre is embellished with a cluster of seed pearls as if to form a flower. A wonderful accent and touch to the overall piece making it a lovely and distinguished piece of antique jewellery. The reverse side presents a locket with a glass panel in which a photo of a loved one may be placed within. Rich in colour, craftsmanship and intricacy, this necklace might just be the perfect piece for the discerning antique jewellery lover. Ideal both as a collectible and versatile piece of jewellery to wear as a standalone piece or amongst other jewellery. A spectacular gift for someone special or for yourself - Pearls are known to be the birthstone for June. The pendant locket is ma...
