Description

A pair of Art Deco era French bookends, c1930, made of spelter, in the form of prancing mountain goats. Spelter, which enables high definition, was popular in France for sculpture and models as an alternative to bronze, which was more expensive. Here the mountain goats have a bronzed finish in highlighted areas. The mountain goats are mounted on solid dark grey marble bases and the books will be held in place by the raised forelegs of the animals. The bookends are in excellent condition.
