Description

Regency mahogany desk chair This Regency mahogany desk chair was made circa 1820. Our example has many of the desirable features with the sabre legs, rope twist back slat and sabre legs. When this chair was made England was still wallowing in the celebrations of Nelson and his victory at Trafalgar. The black line on the back rail was in commemoration of his death at the battle, the rope twist was a pointer to the rope used on the ships of the line, the sabre legs a reflection of the sword, and finally the drop in seats known as Trafalgar seats. The desk chair has the elegant scroll arms, the top rail with the lovely carved scroll to each end and a black line inlay. The drop in seat we have covered in a neutral colour, this will suit most if not all interiors. The chair stands on good sabre shaped legs. These chairs can be used for many uses but do make useful chairs to put behind your desk.
