Description

A 19th-century French farmhouse table constructed from fruitwood displaying a rustic charm. The spacious top features a gently worn surface, suitable for dining or various activities. Supported by tapered legs, the table provides stability while maintaining a visually light appearance that complements different interior styles. It features two drawers: one on the apron side and another at the end, both equipped with a French drop handle, offering practical storage for everyday items and addressing the functional needs typical of farmhouse living. The rich patina of the surface indicates its age and usage, contributing to the overall character of the piece. Well-suited for a country kitchen or intimate dining area, the table serves as a versatile addition that enhances both functionality and aesthetic appeal in any home.
