Description

A rare pair of 17th-century Oak Yorkshire armchairs. These large, bold armchairs were probably made by the same person, as the carving patterns and punch work are identical. If not the same person, they were definitely made in the same workshop. One was part of a private collection for over 40 years; the other, bought recently, was at Dutton Manor. It is impossible to speculate when the chairs were separated, but it is nice to bring them back together after 350 years. They are in excellent colour and condition, with one chair having a later seat.
