Description

An interesting ~ possibly unique ~ late 18th/early 19th century SEDAN CLOCK very much in the "Strawberry Hill" manner. The ebonised Gothic-shaped case is embellished with cast scrolls and paterae, with a brass surround and complete with its original vase-shaped hanger. The unsigned 30-hour fusee movement is original and complete with its good convex enamel dial; blued steel hands and convex glass within its cast brass bezel. Original throughout and in full working order. 24 x 14 x 3cms. circa 1800.  Strawberry Hill in Twickenham (south-west of London) is Britain's finest example of Georgian Gothic-revival architecture. It was purchased in 1747 by Horace Walpole (son of the first Prime Minister) who proceeded to transform it into his vision of a "little Gothic Castle". It is now owned by the Strawberry Hill Trust, and following restoration, is now open to the public.
