Description

Fine Regency portrait of young master Hull preparing a pipe from an artist in the circle of John Hopper (1758-1810). The handsome and elegant young sitter is depicted half-length seated within an extensive landscape, With his light chestnut hair his sparkling eyes averted away from the viewer, and he leans on a table preparing a pipe, likely for his father. He wears the traditional attire of aristocratic young gentlemen of the period, namely a brown velvet suit worn over a collar with a frilled shirt. Master Hull wears the highly fashionable attire of wealthy young gentlemen of the period, namely a shimmering brown velvet suit worn over a wide white pleated and frilled collar. This early 19th century evocation of childhood is in an excellent state of conservation and comes ready to hang and enjoy in its original gilt composition frame. For a companion work of the sitters brother, please see our other listing These beguiling portraits are available individually at the price listed below. Alternatively they may be purchased as a pair in their matching frames, by negotiation. John Hopper (1759-1801) Hoppner was born in London to German parents who lived at the co...
