Description

A twinkly Georgian-era brooch formed of tiny faceted cut steels. Cut-steel jewellery is made from tightly packed steel studs riveted to a metal baseplate in a hugely time-consuming process. The finished effect was designed to reflect the light back from all the tiny faceted surfaces, making the jewellery sparkle like rose-cut diamonds in the 19th century candlelight. In excellent antique condition. Size: Approximately 3.5cm diameter. Weight: 7.4g.
