Description

Herbert Thomas Dicksee. An early 20th c dry point etching of a Dog entitled The Closed Door in original ebonised frame and thin waved glass. Monogrammed lower right H D 1919. Some minor foxing to border. Inscribed at bottom left in pencil Etched by Herbert Dicksee K E and in middle bottom Copyright 1920 by Frost and Reed Ltd in the United States of America Overall Size : 31 inches wide 24 inches high Herbert Thomas Dicksee (14 June 1862 – 20 February 1942)[1] was an English painter who specialised in oil paintings of dogs, particularly the deerhound. Prints and etchings of his best-known paintings were widely distributed by publishers such as Klackner of London, and his work is popular among collectors and dog enthusiasts today. Dicksee belonged to an illustrious artistic family. His father was the artist John Dicksee (1817–1905). John's brother Thomas (1819–1895), also a painter, was the father of Sir Frank Dicksee (1853–1928), president of the Royal Academy from 1924 until his death. (Herbert, meanwhile, had one sister, whose name was Amy.) Dicksee studied art at the Slade School, London, on a scholarship. His first painting was exhibited in 1881.
