Description

A gorgeous cut glass condiment or oil bottle from the Georgian Regency period. This delightful example has an oval, shaped body with slice cutting to the shoulders and wrythen cutting to the lower half. There is a panel of cut hobnails to the waist, so typical of this period. The base is cut in octagonal petal shapes and there is a mushroom stopper. The flared collar repeats the petal motif and has a pouring lip to one side. A wonderful example from the Georgian dining table, both practical and decorative. The bottle would have been for condiments used commonly in Georgian times, such as Curry sauce, mushroom ketchup, anchovy sauce or oil. Dimensions below. Postage and packing £12.00 UK £20.00 Europe £26.00 Outside Europe Condition :- Excellent, with no chips or cracks. There is a very small flaw to one of the front panels, part of the manufacture and not damage. Origin :- Anglo/Irish. Date :- c1820. Width :- 5.3 cms. Height :- 15.5 cms. Depth :- 4.2 cms.
