Description

This is a good quality antique 13.5-inch station wall clock, by Anglo Swiss Watch Co., designed for use as a municipal / railway / station clock, housing a timepiece mechanism, circa 1930, with an ebonized mahogany case, which has been lovingly restored to its former glory and is now in good working order. This 13.5-inch station wall clock houses a quality single brass barrel spring driven featuring a timepiece mechanism. We believe the mechanism may be an English Smith's mechanism due to its design but it is not stamped Smiths. During this time, the Smith's company was exporting English mechanisms to the British colonies, where they were cased locally. This 13.5-inch station wall clock features a beautiful mahogany case, with a moulded brass bezel, a pendulum access door on the underside and a mechanism-viewing door on the left-hand side that allows you to view the mechanism whilst in operation. There are four wooden pegs which secure the front of the clock to the case. The mahogany case has been cleaned and wax polished by hand and it retains its original ebonised finish. On the back of the clock is a bracket to attach the clock to the wall. The movement ha...
