Description

George Turner British, (1843-1910) A Highland Drove Oil on board, signed, further signed & inscribed verso Image size: 12 inches x 17.25 inches Size including frame: 18 inches x 23.25 inches A lovely landscape painting of figures with Highland cattle by George Turner. In the foreground to the left, a figure can be seen riding a white horse alongside a herd of Highland cattle. As they approach a ford, one of the cows stops to take a drink whilst others graze or continue to make their way along the track. In the distance behind the drove lies a dramatic mountainous landscape. George Turner was a landscape painter born in Cromford, Derbyshire around 1843 to Thomas and Mary Turner. His father was a tailor and encouraged his son's natural talent for art. Although largely self-taught, he was able to set himself up as a professional artist by the age of 20. He also turned his hand to private art teaching as a young man. After moving to Barrow-on-Trent he met and married his first wife Eliza Lakin in 1865. They lived at her family farm 'The Walnuts' in Barrow on Trent and had four children, two of whom became artists, Mary Turner (later Woore) and the better known William L...
