Description

A fine and rare set of six 18th century George III architectural Chippendale gothic dining chairs, circa 1760. England. Made from beautifully patinated mahogany, these chairs are a testament to the enduring elegance of Chippendale design. The backs of the chairs are distinguished by their intricately carved, pierced splats, showcasing elegant Gothic arches and flowing tracery. These architectural motifs are further enhanced by finely detailed acanthus leaf carvings, after the grandeur of Gothic cathedrals. The shaped crest rails are adorned with scrolling details and a central cartouche, adding a sense of structure and balance to the design. Supported by square-section legs joined by stretchers. The chairs combine durability with architectural simplicity. The overall form is sculptural and functional. Each chair features a generously proportioned seat, traditionally upholstered in green damask with a subtle botanical pattern that echoes the natural motifs of the carvings. Chippendale's Gothic chairs represent the pinnacle of 18th-century English craftsmanship, blending the elegance of Georgian furniture with the dramatic motifs of medieval Gothic architecture.
