Description

This exquisite Queen Anne-period chest of drawers, dating to around 1700, showcases the refined characteristic of early 18th-century English furniture. The top is beautifully quarter-veneered in rich walnut, arranged in a symmetrical pattern that enhances the natural beauty of the wood grain. A fine herringbone inlaid border frames the surface, adding an extra touch of sophistication. The chest is configured with three short drawers over three long, graduated drawers, each drawer is adorned with cross-banded walnut fronts, emphasizing the depth and warmth of the timber. The brass swan-neck handles and decorative escutcheons complement the period design, adding a touch of understated opulence. The sides of the chest are also cross-banded, demonstrating the level of detail and craftsmanship throughout the piece. The chest stands proudly on turned bun feet, a classic feature of the Queen Anne style, offering both stability and elegance. With a rich patina and warm colour, this chest has aged beautifully, retaining its period charm while remaining in excellent condition. A fine example of early 18th-century English furniture, this piece would make a distinguished addition to any collection.
