Description

This is a stunning pair of antique hand-painted porcelain cabinet plates, crafted by the renowned Coalport porcelain company in England during the late 19th century. Each plate features a beautifully detailed landscape scene, meticulously painted in fine detail. First plate: Depicts a picturesque view of Loch Lomond, one of Scotland's most famous lakes, celebrated for its breathtaking natural beauty. In the 19th century, Loch Lomond was a popular subject for British porcelain, often appearing in tourist and souvenir series. Second plate: Showcases a scene inspired by Grasmere, a charming village in England's Lake District, historically linked to poet William Wordsworth and known for its stunning landscapes. Both plates feature a rich cobalt blue border, adorned with intricate gold gilt patterns, adding a luxurious and refined touch. The hand-painted central landscapes demonstrate Coalport's mastery in porcelain decoration. Founded in 1795 in Shropshire, England, Coalport became one of Britain's most prestigious porcelain manufacturers. Known for its fine craftsmanship, innovative use of color, and elegant designs, the company gained international acclaim and was favored b...
