Description

Rare Late 18th-Century Enoch Wood & Sons Lead-Glazed Earthenware Teapot A rare and exceptional antique lead-glazed earthenware teapot, finely crafted and painted with enamels by Enoch Wood & Sons at the very end of the 18th century. The teapot features a raised relief design, vibrant colours, and a striking combination of snow-white earthenware with dark blue glaze. The lid is topped with a floral finial, where a dark blue base contrasts beautifully with a pink centre. This piece showcases the artistic and technical achievements of Enoch Wood & Sons, reflecting the refined craftsmanship of the period. It is almost impossible to find a similar teapot, although a comparable example is held in the Victoria and Albert Museum, which has 34 works related to Enoch Wood & Sons. Historical Background Enoch Wood (1759–1840) trained under Josiah Wedgwood and Thomas Wheeldon before establishing his own firms. Initially working as Wood & Caldwell from 1783 to 1790, he later continued under Enoch Wood & Co. (1790–1818) before forming Enoch Wood & Sons in 1818. The company became renowned for finely modelled figures, historical scenes, and blue transfer-printed wares. Operating until...
