Description

This early 18th-century oak table is an unusual example of a tripod table, probably from the West Country. Having a circular top on a fine baluster stem, supported on a turned under tier and three short cabriole legs. A similar example is photographed in "Oak Furniture The British Tradition" by Victor Chinnery. Figure 3:186, page 298. Good color and condition, having just a small tip to each foot.
