Description

A Very Large Scale 19th Century English Regency Convex Mirror. This splendid mirror is of the convex style which became so popular in England during the regency period but is distinguished by its very large size and some interesting decorative detailing. It features an ebonised slip around the convex plate and then a small section of very fine leaf carving amongst decorative mouldings. After a large protruding moulding, there is a concave section with applied cannon ball detailing and then, around the edge of the piece, several raised mouldings which are tied together with ribbon details. A mirror of this impressive size must have been made for an important house and client and is a rare survivor today.
